MRS. GOUVERNEUR MORRIS JOINS BUSINESS ENTERPRISE

Wife of the Author Becomes
Vice-President of a New Concern.

Mrs. Gouverneur Morris, wife of the author, is the latest New York society matron to embark in business. Within the colorful environment of Primrose Shop, decorated by Chamberlain Dodd, she is to preside in the official capacity as vice-president of the company, which has been formed with New York and Boston capital. The rites of the toilet will be practised under the direction of specialists.

Mrs. Morris, who belongs to an old Westchester family, is a daughter of Mr. James M. Waterbury and a sister of Mr. Lawrence Waterbury. Incidentally, she makes it plain the venture is not a fad. She has taken the step seriously and says she means to make a success in business.

As an expert horsewoman Mrs. Morris is a member of various hunt clubs and rides to the hounds, as do her two young daughters. She is a slender brunette and the mother of three children. The new shop is just off Fifth avenue, its primrose yellow dress picked out by gay red lacquer balconies with window boxes of its name flowers. A door of red lacquer gives entrance to a studio-reception hall two stories in height.

Upon putty colored walls are canvases in Georgian style of decoration by Carlton Moorcock. Against velvet curtains of thorn color separating the balcony from the room proper are old English wing chairs in red lacquer china. Curtains of the same material are at the Tudor windows and through the leaded glass the sunlight shines through shelves of old Bristol and Waterford glass and Venetian water bottles in blue and ruby. Mrs. Helen Woodward, a young business woman, will be an associate.
